State Asks Voters To Approve 3 Mill Relief Tax Next Tuesday

Many citizens have been inquiring about the operation of the law relative to creating relief funds, so I deemed it advisable to give my experience and opinion concerning this important matter.

The number of families on relief in this Township during a period of a year differ. We have had as many as over 50 families and as few as 18 families, therefore it is impossible to determine in advance, exactly what funds are required. The law provides a method for raising funds for relief and reads:

"The electors present at the annual town meeting shall have power: To direct the raising of such money by taxation as may be deemed necessary to be expended for the purpose of caring for poor and indigent persons in townships where such duty is provided by law: Provided, that such tax for the balance of the present fiscal year and for each fiscal year thereafter shall not be in excess of three mills on each dollar, or less of three mills on each dollar of the total equalized assessed value of all the taxable property therein, or 30 cents per $100 and shall in no case exceed the amount needed in such township for the care of poor and indigent persons."

According to the above quotations from relief laws now in effect, no local governmental unit in which the period covered by the special 1936 poor relief levy expires in March or April 1937, will receive state relief funds in May 1937 or subsequent months, unless the maximum 1937 poor relief levy allowed by law is made during April 1937.

At our last year's Town meeting, the voters authorized a levy of 3 mills on each dollar of the assessed value of all taxable property (or 30 cents a $100). Let us assume the voters at this town meeting had defeated this tax levy, then what would have been the alternative?

The families needing relief would necessarily have to be cared for, the State under the law, would have refused to give assistance. Yet food and necessities of life would have to be provided for, so naturally, merchants or business men, would have to extend credit, and finally if no funds for relief would be forthcoming, suits would be filed against the township and judgments obtained. This would result in extra costs and expenses and more taxes would necessarily have to be raised. So the voters at the Town Meeting choose the logical and sensible plan.

The method of levying taxes for relief purposes as determined by the County Clerk, is for the Supervisor to recommend at the town meeting a substantial amount that will be needed, under a maximum situation. I decided upon $5,900. However this does not mean that sum will be needed or realized from taxation.

The County Clerk, when receiving this amount as an estimate, figures the tax levy on the basis of 30 cents per $100 on the total equalized assessed valuation of all the taxable property in the township. Usually it is considerably less than the sum estimated and submitted.

Before the general taxes are levied for township purposes, certain sums are appropriated for specific purposes. These sums so appropriated, must be kept separately, as separate and distinct funds, and can only be used for the purposes specifically appropriated and for no other purposes.

Should the funds appropriated for one purpose be depleted or become low, funds may be borrowed from another fund, but will have to be returned.

Funds provided for Relief Purposes are subject to inspection and supervision by the state and so are the payments and disbursements of those funds. Should it happen that during one year the families on relief become lessened and consequently all funds provided for relief not needed, of course they will be preserved for the next year, and thus a much smaller levy will ensue during that year.

It is my hope and wish that in the near future, all heads of families will find jobs. I know they will be much happier when that time arrives.

And the tax payers who have so nobly responded, will welcome the return to normalcy.

WM. KAMPE, Supervisor, Frankfort Twp.

Makes Strenuous Bid For Re-election

Wm. Kampe, present supervisor of Frankfort township and a candidate for re-election on Independent ticket No. 1 has been campaigning like a veteran office holder the past several weeks.

Mr. Kampe has found that there has been some misunderstanding among voters in the township, relative to men employed on W. P. A. in the township and about young

Mokena Man Making Intensive Final Campaign

The finals in the hot Frankfort township political fight for supervisor or will be fought out this week and next Tuesday will tell the story.

Mokena has a candidate in the race for supervisor and has a very keen interest in the race. Herman Schweser the Mokena candidate is well known all over the township and especially among the farmers. He was for quite a number of years the manager of the former Bowman Dairy plant at Mokena and formed a wide acquaintance in his daily contact with the public.

Mr. Schweser is no new comer in politics. He served as village trustee in Mokena a number of years ago and at present is chief of the Mokena Fire Department.

He has been campaigning quite energetically for the past several weeks. His name will be found on the fourth ticket on the Frankfort township ballot, known as Independent ticket No. 3.

To the Voters of Frankfort Twp.

Due to a late decision to enter the race for CONSTABLE, I was unable to secure my petition on time.

Never-the-less I am now asking all voters in this township to write in my name, KARL KRAUS, on either Independent Tickets, No. 1, 2 or 3 in the blank space under the office entitled CONSTABLE, placing a cross in the square before the same, which is according to law.

Thanking you all in advance,
Yours Truly,
KARL KRAUS.

Tinley Park's New Water Pump Proves Big Saving

The new water pump, recently installed, for Tinley Park's water supply, has proved most successful and economical. This move was well timed and executed by Mayor E. Rice in the face of much minority opposition and criticism.

Through the up-hill procedure in contracting for this new pump, Mayor Rice has displayed a keen judgment and a fine sense of public service. With his weather eye ever open to the general welfare of the village as a whole, he has bravely cast aside all elements of personal gain and prejudiced criticism.

The old pump, in use for a good many years, has already seen its best years of service. It required frequent repairs to keep it in operation and continually threatened the village with abrupt loss of its water supply. It was most urgent that the old pump be replaced at the earliest possible moment.

The new pump installed, is of the very latest design and improvement. This makes it possible to use a pump of less capacity and size, reducing the original cost and future up-keep.

The bill for electricity to operate this new pump demonstrates very conclusively, the soundness of its economy. A month's bill for the old pump always ranged from $25 to $40. The last electric bill for the new pump for one month amounted to $12.50. This speaks for itself.

Mayor Rice is to be commended for his sincere regard for the public welfare.

V. F. W. Meeting

The Veterans of Foreign Wars Wm. Martin Post, No. 725, will hold their regular meeting in the Frankfort hall Saturday evening at 7:30.

men from this township in C. C. camps. Mr. Kampe, as supervisor, has nothing to do with either one of these, both being Federal affairs.

Mr. Kampe states that many of the supervisors in the county have been taken to task because the county board spent money on the county jail proposition, but points out that the county jail has been condemned so many times that the board felt that it would be better to put the question to a vote of the people than to carry on without bringing the matter to a head. If case of illness or an accident at the jail the board could have been held liable, but since the people rejected the new county jail idea, the supervisors can not be held responsible.

Letters to The Editor

Chicago, Ill. March 31, 1937
Editor News-Bulletin,

Dear Sir:

Have we a Supervisor in Frankfort Township?

Have we a Highway Commissioner in Frankfort Township?

We have, why is the highway running west from Mokena to the New Lenox and Frankfort township line in the condition it is in, and why should it not be improved?

This highway was torn up and graded last fall and nothing but a lot of loose stone was left on top of the highway and the officials of the township of Frankfort have had ample time since then, to apply fine stone on top of this highway, but nothing has been done. The town officials of Frankfort and New Lenox township should get together in a huddle and see that this highway is improved from Mokena to Pilcher Park, as it is the short cut to Joliet.

Why cannot the WPA workers improve this highway? Let the officials of New Lenox and Frankfort townships answer through your paper.

L. G. BRUDER

Facts to Consider

In your business or on your farm would you want a man to manage your business, that is associated with any group, that has spent $7,000 of the tax payers money for plans to build a new jail and in addition, spent several days on salary of the taxpayers' money, to kill the same issue?

The main issue in this campaign, seems to rest on the fact that Frankfort Township is the only township in the county, that has a bank account. In July 1936, you taxpayers were asked for an additional amount to cover future expenses in the amount of $5900, stating at that time, there was only 18 on relief in the entire township. Is there any reason why the township shouldn't have a bank account under those conditions? Especially when we had an appropriation of $634.00 for the month of March, not saying anything about other months.

With only 18 on relief in this township, where is this exorbitant amount of taxpayer's money going to, and why should the township not have a bank account under such conditions when their isn't a gravel or stone road in the township that is fit to travel on?

As taxpayers, will we continue to tolerate such conditions?

A TAXPAYER.

Tinley Civic Club Makes Progress

The new Tinley Park Civic Club is rapidly taking definite form and moving on to its objectives of progress and development.

Standing committees have been appointed by President O'Neil. Their work of the various civic interests, will now be under way. Social activities are being planned for the members and their families. A big party is on the way for some time early in May. The future of the club looks very bright and promises some lively social activities for its members and their families.

Any male citizen, of voting age, of Tinley Park or its vicinity who desires to become a member of this club must submit their name, sign an application and remit $1.00 as initiation fee to the chairman of the membership committee, who is Mr. Roman Gonia at the Tinley Park Drug Store.

Christ on Throne

Surely this nation has become a sinful nation, shall we say as sinful as Sodom and Gomora. The curse of sin is written upon every city, village and hamlet, even the trees and soil show forth the penalty of the curse of sin. The trees dying, the land non-productive. The beauty of the Garden of Eden, that God created to show forth His creative power, has faded into obiliteration and man, created in the image of God, has so far degenerated, that there is no resemblance to its original image.

Has there ever been a time when this world needed to change its course of downward destruction and get back to the time when we need a government whose laws are righteous and are just, giving life to every human being that will obey them.

Only by placing Christ on the throne in the home, can this be brought about. To late to make a Christian world, for God has said the end is at hand. Prepare to meet thy God.

The nations are marshalling their armies, preparing the most deadly means of killing one another. While the statesmen of the different nations are holding conferences trying to find a way to peace, the war Lords are going ahead and preparing for that last great battle of Armageddon which will wipe out the whole world, and then will Christ, the rightful ruler of this Universe take possession and the few that have honored and obeyed Him here, will reign with Him in the hereafter.

Who will be the chosen few? Will you my dear friend? It will be by your own choice. Jesus is the only solution to the awful holocaust that is coming upon the world. Place Him upon His rightful throne in your home and in your life. Prepare to meet Him when He comes in all His glory, for it not only means life in the hereafter, but life while we are here for He says that "I am the way and the life."

The Bible is the standard of all books, the only book that points a way of escape from the doom that is coming upon the world.

Results of opening round games in the Tinley Park basketball tournament spell "REAL BASKETBALL." Sunday afternoon's final game will undoubtedly be the greatest display of closely contested basketball ever witnessed on the local hardwood floor.

Spectators at the games are still agog with the thrills received. Imagine the Harvey I C's being three points behind with only 25 seconds to go and winning from Homewood by the score of 34 to 33. Tom Nisbet, Illini ace, turned the trick with a sweeping side shot.

Imagine Dwyer being 10 points behind in the final period coming up to lead Salem 29 to 27 with two minutes to go only to see the Blue Islanders drive on to a 33 to 32 triumph!

An then Mokena, with the cream of Joliet's champs, squeezing out a 34 to 31 victory over a scrappy Manteno team that displayed one of the finest attacks yet seen in Tinley Park.

A strong Peotone team took Blue Island's Grove Street Colts into camp by a handy score. And then Buda, augmented by Ben Hellman, former member of Thornton's state champs and one of the Little Nineteen Conference's leading scores, took advantage of Tinley Park-Orland's off night to enter the second round. The local lads couldn't get up steam enough to better the Harvey Boy's attack.

All week long these battles have been going on keeping a full house on edge. Fans are looking forward to the semi finals Friday evening and the championship game on Sunday afternoon which will see the pick of basketball talent in this area battle for honors.

The Garden Murder Case

CHAPTER IX—Continued

"I was fully prepared to run that risk. It wasn't a hell of a lot. What did the old oat-muncher pay, anyway?—less than two to one. A dollar and eighty cents to the dollar, to be exact. I would have been out $18,000. But there wasn't a chance of Equanimity's coming in—I was quite certain of that. I took the chance for Woody's sake."

Vance looked at the man thoughtfully.

"Thanks for the affectin' confession," he murmured at length. "I think that will be all for the moment."

As he spoke, two men with a long coffin-like wicker basket bustled in to the passageway. Heath was at the door in two strides.

"The public welfare boys after the body," he announced over his shoulder.

Vance stood up.

"I say, Sergeant, have them go down the outside stairway. No use returning through the apartment." He addressed Garden again. "Would you mind showing them the way?"

Garden nodded morosely and went out on the roof.

Markham regarded Vance with dismal concern.

"What's the meaning of Garden's not placing that bet?"

Vance sighed.

"What's the meaning of anything? Yet, it's from just such curious facts as this that some provisional hypothesis may evolve."

"I certainly can't figure out what bearing Garden's conduct has on the case, unless—"

Vance interrupted him quickly.

"No. Puzzlin' situation. But everything we have learned so far might mean something. Provided, of course, we could read the meaning. Emotion may be the key."

"Don't be so damned occult," snapped Markham. "What's on your mind?"

"My dear Markham! You're too flatterin'. Nothing whatever. I'm seekin' for something tangible. The other gun, for instance. The one that went off somewhere when the chappie was already dead. It should be here or hereabouts . . ."

He turned to Heath. "I say, Sergeant, could you and Snitkin take a look for it? Suggested itterby: the roof-garden and the flowerbeds, the terrace, the public stairs, the lower hallway. Then the apartment proper."

Heath grinned.

"And, Sergeant, before you start reconnoiterin', will you fetch Hammie. You'll probably find him at the bar downstairs."

Hammie strutted pompously into the study and was cursorily presented to Markham.

The interview was brief and, as it turned out, of peculiar significance.

"It is not our desire to keep you here any longer than necessary, Mr. Hammie," Vance began the interview with marked distaste—"but it occurred to me to ask you if you have any ideas that might be helpful to us in solving Swift's murder."

Hammie coughed impressively and appeared to give the matter considerable thought.

"No, I have none," he at length admitted. "None whatever. But of course one can never tell about these things."

"Of course," Vance agreed. "But I thought there might be something in the relationships of the various people here this afternoon."

"All I can say," returned Hammie, carefully weighing his words, "is that there were many warring elements in the gathering—that is to say, many peculiar combinations. There was a combination of this and that, which might lead to—well, to anything."

"To murder, for instance?"

Hammie frowned. "Now, murder is a very, very serious business. But, Mr. Vance, you can take it from me, in all solemnity, I wouldn't put even murder past any one of those present today. No, by Gad!"

"That's an amazing indictment," muttered Vance; "but I'm glad to have your opinion and we'll consider it . . . By the by, didn't you notice anything irregular in Garden's placing Swift's large bet on Equanimity at the last minute?"

Hammie's countenance went quickly blank. Then, unable to withstand the direct scrutiny of Vance's cold gaze, he puckered up his mouth into a shrewd smile.

"Why deny it?" he chuckled. "The laying of that bet was not only irregular—it was damned near impossible. I don't know a book-maker in New York who would take such an amount when there was not even enough time to throw some 'come-back money' into the totalizer."

Vance leaned forward.

"That might easily have had some bearing on the situation here this afternoon, and I'd like very much to know why you didn't mention it."

For a brief moment the man seemed flustered; but almost immediately he settled back in his chair with a complacent look, and extended his hands, palms up.

"Why should I become involved?" he asked with cynical suavity.

"That's one way of looking at it," Vance drawled. "And it has its points. However . . ." He contemplated the tip of his cigarette, then asked: "Would your discretion permit you to comment on Zalia Graem?"

Hammie sat up with alacrity.

"Ah!" He nodded his head significantly. "That's something to think about. There are varied possibilities in that girl. You may be on the right track. A most likely suspect for the murder. You never can tell about women, anyway. And, come to think of it, the shooting must have taken place during the time she was out of the room."

"But don't think, for a minute," Hammie hurried on, "that I am intimating that she had anything to do with Swift's death. Absolutely not! But the mention of her name gave me pause."

Vance stood up with a stifled yawn.

"It's quite evident," he said, "you're not in the mood to be specific. I wasn't looking for generalities, don't you know. Consequently I may want to have another chat with you. Where can you be reached later, should we need you?"

"If I am permitted to go now, I shall return to Long Island immediately."

I Heard What Sounded Like a Shot.

ately," Hammie answered readily, glancing speculatively at his watch. "Is that all you wish at the moment?"

"That is all, thank you."

Hammie again referred to his watch, hesitated a moment, and then left us.

Vance went to the buzzer, and pressed the button.

"Queer reports on that Graem girl," he walked back to his chair musingly. "The time has come to commune with the lady herself."

Garden appeared at the door.

"Did you ring for me, Vance?"

"Yes," Vance nodded. "The buzzer is working now. Sorry to trouble you, but we would like to see Miss Graem. Would you do the honors?"

Garden hesitated, his eyes fixed sharply on Vance. He started to say something, changed his mind and, with a muttered "Right-o," swung about and returned downstairs.

Zalia Graem swaggered into the room, her hands in her jacket pockets, and surveyed us with breezy cynicism.

"Miss Graem," Vance's voice was courteous but firm—"it will be necessary to ask you questions that you may deem objectionable. But please believe that it will be for your own good to answer them frankly."

"Am I suspected? How thrilling!"

"Everyone I've talked to so far thinks so," He looked at the girl significantly.

"Oh, so that's how the going is! I thought I detected a vague look of fear in people's eyes. I think I will sit down." She threw herself into a chair and gazed up with simulated dejection. "Am I to be arrested?"

"Not just at the minute. But certain matters must be straightened out. It may be worth your while to help us."

"It sounds ghastly. But go ahead."

"First," said Vance, "we'd like to know about the feud between you and Swift."

"Oh, the devil!" the girl exclaimed disgustedly. "Must that be raked up? There was really nothing to it. Woody bothered the life out of me. I felt sorry for him and went around with him a bit when he implored me to and threatened to resort to all the known forms of suicide if I didn't. Then it became too much for me, and I decided to draw a line across the page. But I'm afraid I didn't go about it in a nice way. I told him I was extravagant and cared only for luxuries, and that I could never marry a poor man."

"And so, the conclusion we may draw is that he played the horses heavily in the forlorn hope of amassing a sufficient fortune to overcome your aversion to his poverty—and that his bet on Equanimity today was a last fling—"

"Don't say that!" the girl cried. "It's a horrible idea, but—it might be true. And I don't want to hear that's why I went mid-Victorian and almost passed out when I saw him. That's everything."

Vance continued to study her critically.

"Yes, as you say. It might be true. On the other hand . . . however, we'll let it pass." Then he asked quickly: "Who telephoned you today, just before the Rivermont Handicap?"

"What has that to do with anything?"

"And why were you so eager to take the call on the den phone and shut the door?"

The girl leaned forward and looked at Vance defiantly.

"What are you trying to get at?" she demanded furiously.

"Are you aware," Vance went on, "that the den downstairs is the only room directly connected by wires with this room up here?"

The girl seemed unable to speak. She sat pale and rigid.

"And do you know," he continued, without change of intonation, "that the wires at this end of the line had been disconnected? And are you aware that the shot which we heard downstairs was not the one that ended Swift's life—that he was shot in the vault off the hall, several minutes before we heard the shot?"

"You're being ghastly," the girl cried. "You're making up nightmares—nightmares to frighten me. You're implying terrible things."

Vance held up his hand to stop her reproaches.

"You misinterpret my attitude, Miss Graem," he said softly. "I asked you, a moment ago, for your own sake, to answer my questions frankly. You refuse. In those circumstances, you should know the facts as they appear to others." He paused. "You and Swift were not on good terms. You knew, as did the others, that he usually went up to the roof before races. You knew where Professor Graem kept his revolver. You're familiar with guns. A telephone call for you is perfectly timed. You disappear. Within the next five minutes Swift is shot behind that steel door. Another five minutes pass; the race is over; and a shot is heard. That shot could conceivably have been fired by a mechanism. The buzzer wires up here had been disconnected, obviously for some specific purpose. At the time of the second shot you were at the other end of those wires. You almost fainted at the sight of Swift. Later you tried to go upstairs . . . Adding all this up: you had a motive, a sufficient knowledge of the situation, access to the criminal agent, the ability to act, and the opportunity." Vance paused again. "Now are you ready to be frank, or have you really something to hide?"

A change came over the girl. She relaxed, as if from a sudden attack of weakness. She did not take her eyes from Vance, and appeared to be appraising him and deciding what course to follow.

Before she managed to speak Heath stamped up the passageway and opened the study door. He carried a woman's black-and-white tweed top-coat over his arm. He cocked an eyebrow at Vance and nodded triumphantly.

"I take it, Sergeant," Vance drawled, "your quest has been successful. You may speak out." He turned to Zalia Graem and explained: "Sergeant Heath has been searching for the gun that fired the second shot."

The girl became suddenly animated and leaned forward attentively.

"After going over the roof and the stairs and the hall of the apartment, I thought I'd look through the wraps hanging in the hall closet," said Heath. "The gun was in the pocket of this." He threw the coat on the davenport and took a .38 gun-metal revolver from his pocket. He broke it and showed it to Vance and Markham. "Full of blanks—and one of 'em has been discharged."

"Very good, Sergeant," Vance complimented him. "Whose coat is this, by the by?"

"I don't know yet, Mr. Vance; but I'm going to find out pronto."

Zalia Graem had risen and come forward.

"I can tell you whose coat that is," she said. "It belongs to Miss Beeton, the nurse. I saw her wearing it yesterday."

"Thanks awfully for the identification," returned Vance, his eyes resting dreamily on her.

She gave him a wry smile and returned to her chair.

"But there's a question still pending," Vance said; "to wit: are you ready to be frank now?"

"All right," She focused her gaze on Vance again. "Lemmy Merrit, one of the various scions of the horsey aristocracy that infests our eastern seaboard, asked me to drive out to Sands Point with him for the polo game tomorrow. I thought I might dig up some more exciting engagement and told him to call me here this afternoon at half-past three for a final yes or no. I purposely stipulated that time, so I wouldn't miss the running of the Handicap. As you know, he didn't call till after four, with excuses about not having been able to get to a telephone. I tried to get rid of him in a hurry, but he was persistent—the only virtue he possesses, so far as I know. I left him dangling on the wire when I came out to listen to the race, and then went back for a farewell and have-a-nice-time-without-me. Just as I hung up I heard what sounded like a shot and came to the door, to find everyone hurrying along the hall. An idea went through my head that maybe Woody had shot himself—that's why I went mid-Victorian and almost passed out when I saw him. That's everything."

UNCOMMON AMERICANS

By Elmo Scott Watson

© Western Newspaper Union

Schoolmaster of a Nation

HE WAS "the most popular American of the Nineteenth century, the man who had the largest influence in determining the thoughts and ideals of the American people during that period and the man to whose work many great Americans of the present day pay tribute as being the fountain of their inspiration to aspire and to achieve." He was William Holmes McGuffey, the "Schoolmaster of a Nation."

Born in Pennsylvania in 1800, McGuffey became a pioneer teacher in Kentucky after his graduation from a little college in his native state and later was offered a position on the faculty of Miami university in Ohio. Recognizing the lack of good reading material in the common schools of those days, McGuffey resolved to do something about it.

The result was the publication in 1836 of the first and in 1837 the second of a graded set of readers. The next year he published a third and a fourth reader. Then, with the help of his brother, Alexander McGuffey, who aided in the revision of the earlier works and collected much of the material for the next two, he issued his fifth and sixth Eclectic Readers.

McGuffey not only had a keen literary sense but he was also able to select from the world's best literature selections that appealed to children. That fact, combined with the high moral tone of the selections, which recommended them to parents trying to bring their children up in the way they should go, gave his readers great popularity. They sold by the millions in this country and were translated into many foreign languages so that the McGuffey influence was extended into other lands.

How great that influence was—especially in this country—it is impossible to estimate. But there is no doubt that the serious purpose of the McGuffey Eclectic Readers, their kindly spirit and their teachings of the essential virtues made children of an earlier generation better men and women today. At least, that is the unanimous testimony of many American notables—authors, educators, industrialists, statesmen—not to mention thousands of "just plain folks" who belong to the numerous "McGuffey Societies" scattered all over the United States. At regular intervals they gather together to read again their favorite selections from the Eclectic Readers and to the end of their days they cherish in their hearts the lessons they once learned from this "Schoolmaster of a Nation."

He Saved an Empress

IF IT had not been for the resourcefulness and courage of an American dentist, the last empress of the French might have met death at the hands of an infuriated mob of revolutionists and another tragic chapter might have been written in the history of deposed royalty in that country. The empress was Eugenie, wife of Napoleon III, and the man who saved her was a Dr. Thomas W. Evans.

Not long after Louis Napoleon became emperor, Dr. Evans was made court dentist of the second empire. At that time dentistry was not the respected profession that it is today. But such was the genius of this former Philadelphiaian that he was held in equal esteem with all of Napoleon's ministers.

So on September 2, 1870, when news of the disaster at Sedan reached Paris and a bloodthirsty populace began clamoring at the gates of the Tuilleries and threatening the life of the empress, she said to the officers of the palace guard "I will go to Dr. Evans. He is an American. I am sure he will render us every assistance we require." With only a veil as disguise and accompanied by one of her servants, the empress fled by a secret passage to where a carriage was waiting for her. Then she was driven in safety to Dr. Evans' home, only to find him absent.

When he returned, he realized that it would be dangerous for the empress to try to escape then, so she and her servant spent the night there. Meanwhile Dr. Evans had engaged a private carriage and the next morning he started out with the royal fugitive on a perilous journey.

Everywhere soldiers were on the look-out for the empress but the quick-witted action and ingenious ruses of the American, more than once prevented their capture. By spending his own money freely he brought Eugenie in safety to the coast and there he persuaded the owner of an English yacht to take her to England.

Dr. Evans continued his practice in both France and America, and his inventions in his profession made him world famous. He later became one of the founders of the Red Cross society, and upon his death in 1896 he bequeathed his entire fortune of some twelve millions to American institutions.

Lesson for April 4

GOD THE CREATOR

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 1:1-5, 26-31.
GOLDEN TEXT—In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth. Gen. 1:1.

PRIMARY TOPIC—When God Made the World.

JUNIOR TOPIC—In the Beginning—God.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—God the Maker of All.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—God in Creation.

From the completion of the great Gospel of John, which took us back to that time "in the beginning" when the Living Word "was" and "was with God and was God," we turn to the first book of the Bible, which is, as indicated by its title, a book of "beginnings." We find in it not only the record of the creation of the heavens and earth, but of man, and the beginnings of his history, the entrance of sin into the world, the beginning of God's revelation of redemption. It is indeed a most important book, fundamental to an understanding of the rest of the Bible.

Genesis has been the special object of attack on the part of critics, and especially by those who saw in its account of the creation statements which apparently did not square with the announced findings of science. Fortunately, as men make advances in scientific discovery, as well as in the understanding of God's Word, they are beginning to realize that there is no real conflict between the established facts of science and a proper interpretation of Scripture. When there is an apparent clash it will be found that either the Bible has been misinterpreted by men or they have mistaken a hypothesis of science for a fact.

We are in error when we talk about the Bible's being confirmed by archaeology or by science. If the United States naval observatory should find that its master clock does not agree with the observation of the stars, it would not assume that the universe had gotten out of order. It would know that the clock is wrong, and would make correction. Science does not confirm the Bible; the Bible confirms true science.

The account of creation may be considered in two great divisions.

I. The Creation of Heaven and Earth (1:1-5).

"In the beginning God"—what awe-inspiring words! How fully and satisfactorily they state the origin of all things.

Men ask us to believe their theories, but there is no cosmogony offered which does not call for a measure of credulity. Man cannot explain the origin of matter, the origin of life, the origin of rational life. These three great gaps and many smaller ones his theories cannot bridge. Man asks us to take his word for them. But we prefer to take God's Word.

Study the entire account of creation. Space here forbids more than the briefest reference to its perfect order and symmetry, its completeness, the self-evident fact that it is a true account of the working of God. It is so received by thoughtful men and women of our day. Even scoffers have long since ceased to speak foolish words about "the mistakes of Moses."

II. The Creation of Man (vv. 16-23).

"Let us" is an indication that the Holy Trinity was active in creation. God the Father is mentioned (v. 1), the Holy Spirit (v. 2), and without the Son was nothing made (John 1:3).

Man was created in "the likeness and image of God." This undoubtedly refers to a moral and spiritual likeness. Man is a moral being, possessed of all the characteristics of true personality. He is a living spirit, with intelligence, feeling, will-power. This image, no matter how it may have been defaced by sin, is that in man which makes it possible for us to seek him in his sin and beseech him "to be reconciled to God." "Down in the human heart, crushed by the tempter, feelings lie buried that grace can restore."

Notice that God gave man "a helpmeet unto him," that he established the family as the center of life on this earth. He gave man dominion over the entire creation, and his restless pioneering spirit still carries him on to the complete realization of that promise. He provided not only for man's spiritual and social needs, but also for his every physical need. Surely we may say with Moses that "everything that he (God) had made . . . was very good" (v. 31).

A Man of Sorrow

One reason why Jesus was a man of sorrow was that He saw as none other the pain and sin and woe of the world.

A Hard Road

The hard road of sin is always so crowded that it gives little room for turning around and going back.

Determination

He only is a well-made man who has a good determination.—Emerson.

Like Most Such Vows

The historian is excused when he smiles at coming across the notation that in May of the year 1790 the representatives of the people in France of the revolution passed amidst enthusiastic applause a pacific resolution which was to be inscribed in the charter of their new constitution: "The French nation will never undertake a war of conquest." Napoleon, you remember, came immediately after.

Don't Sleep When Gas Presses Heart

If you want to really GET RID OF GAS and terrible bloating, don't expect to do it by just doctoring your stomach with harsh, irritating alkalies and "gas tablets." Most GAS is lodged in the stomach and upper intestine and is due to old poisonous matter in the constipated bowels that are loaded with ill-causing bacteria.

If your constipation is of long standing, enormous quantities of dangerous bacteria accumulate. Then your digestion is upset. GAS is often pressed in the heart and lungs, making life miserable. You can't eat or sleep. Your head aches. Your back aches. Your complexion is sallow and pimply. Your breath is foul. You are a sick, grouchy, wretched unhappy person. YOUR SYSTEM IS POISONED.

Thousands of sufferers have found in Adierka the quick, scientific way to rid their systems of harmful bacteria. Adierka rids you of gas and cleanses foul poisons out of BOTH upper and lower bowels. Give your bowels a REAL cleansing with Adierka. Get rid of GAS. Adierka does not grippe—is not habit forming. At all Leading Druggists.

Household Questions

A thin syrup of sugar and water flavored with almond essence is good to sweeten fruit cup.

Your doughnuts will have that different flavor if one half stick of bark of cinnamon and four whole cloves are added to the fat used in frying them.

Stockings can become a very expensive item for the mother of school-children—who are always falling down and tearing big holes in the knees. Try this way of repairing an outside hole: Take a piece of strong net to match the stocking and place over the hole on the inside of the stocking. Then darn the hole with wool that exactly matches the stocking on the right side of the stocking through the net. The repair, you will find, will be scarcely visible.

If a hot cinder falls on your carpet and damages it; repair it with wool. Buy skeins of wool to match the colors in your carpet. Fill in the damaged part with loops of the various wools, following the pattern as nearly as possible. The loops should be tightly packed together and made slightly higher than the pile of your carpet.

If sirup for hotcakes is heated before serving it brings out the flavor of the sirup and does not chill the hotcakes.

To keep the crease in men's trousers, turn them inside out and soap down the crease with a piece of dry soap, then turn back to the right side and press, using a damp cloth. The crease will remain for a long time.

Quotations

For all the cruelty and stupidity in the world today, man has not done so badly in so brief a period.—Henry Morgenthau.

There can be no permanence for a nation whose people have only a selfish interest in its welfare.—John I. Pershing.

The cause of freedom is identified with the destinies of humanity, and 'n whatever part of the world it gains ground, by and by it will be a common gain to all who desire it.—Kossuth.

It is vain to trust in wrong; as much of evil, so much of loss, is the formula of human history.—Theodore Parker.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES

"Reality" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, March 28.

The Golden Text was, "Lord, thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations" (Psalms 90:1).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "Thine, O Lord, is the greatness, and the power, and the glory, and the victory, and the majesty: for all that is in the heaven and in the earth is thine; thine is the kingdom, O Lord, and thou art exalted as head above all. Both riches and honour come of thee, and thou reignest over all; and in thine hand is power and might; and in thine hand it is to make great, and to give strength unto all" (1 Chron. 29:11-12).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "The Scriptures imply that God is All-in-all. From this it follows that nothing possesses reality nor existence except the divine Mind and His ideas" (p. 331).

Around The Town

We hear E. M. sort of goes for her dentist. She made several trips to him last week.

J. F. seems awfully thrilled when H. F. is around. Especially at basketball games.

A reader would like to know if R. D. saw more than one pink carnation Saturday night at the dance.

Better watch your step now kids, being this column has two Walter Winchles working. Yes sir F. H. and O. O. have taken quite a fancy to picking up gossip and gadding about for news.

Someone claims that the way A. O. keeps L. B. worried is really pathetic.

P. S. the New Lenox Go-getter has roped none other than Bob R. the handsome farm lad.

Believe it or not but T. H. has found a new girl friend; and this time it happens to be H. M.

Its reported that G. O. has quite a crush on M. S.

Betty tells us that D. P. has a new boy friend. This time it happens to be O. "Buddy" W.—and he drives a Chevy.

A certain gal would like to know why "Fitz" got tired Sunday night.

Believe it or not but last week J. L. filled out an application for work at Glodblatt's in the candy department, for next Christmas.

F. S. and L. T. must be getting it bad—they spend their afternoons together as well as all evenings.

We hear Bob D. is that way about a certain little gal from Frankfort. How does Corrine feel about this Bob?

Someone writes that G. S. and F. B. are hitting it off fine.

A. W. says theres nothing she hates more than some clumsy people walking all over her feet. Claims she didnt know her feet were that big.

Diamond Lil goes for card sharks in a big way. Especially the one from Florida.

Riding Breeches are getting to be quite the thing in New Lenox now. Practical for horse back riders. Glodblatt's must be doing a rushing business. According to L. she's gonna have two pairs, one for horse-back riding and the other for byke riding.

Believe it or not but 'Ma' R. is afraid to ride with anyone but her hubby.

HOW OFTEN CAN YOU KISS AND MAKE UP?

NEW husbands can understand why a wife should turn from a pleasant companion into a shrew for one whole week in every month. You can say "I'm sorry" and kiss and make up easier before marriage than after. If you're wise and if you want to hold your husband, you won't be a three-quarter wife.

For three generations one woman has told another how to go "smiling through" with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It helps Nature tune up the system, thus lessening the discomforts from the functional disorders which women must endure in the three ordeals of life: 1. Turning from girlhood to womanhood. 2. Preparing for motherhood. 3. Approaching "middle age."

Don't be a three-quarter wife, take LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND and Go "Smiling Through."

CONTENTMENT

These people who call, so smooth and well-dressed Who, by subtle maneuvers, my intelligence test Are inclined to amuse me, (tho this they'd deride) For, in spite of their "wisdom" I still abide.

By the fact that their quest for money galore And the fact that they've attained it can matter no more If they have nothing genuine to show, such as this:— Two tots on the floor and connubial bliss.

With the latest of clothes and a fine car They smile very smugly and t'is clear that they are Faintly contemptuous, (sorry in fact), For me and the "wonderful" things that I lack.

And, altho I look funny, in fact almost disgraced In a rather mused apron and a not so clean face, When one considers what it's all really worth I'm inclined to believe I'm entitled to mirth.

For the general idea of the entire plan, While lacking the dollar sign, really is grand And oddly enough when all's said and done Somehow or other I don't feel so dumb!

THE RED TERROR MARCHES ON

By Dr. Dan Gilbert

From its inception in 1917, the Russian Bolshevik revolution has re-created, with uncanny accuracy, the tragic dramatic sequences of the French Revolution.

The slaughter of the nobility, the persecution of the church, the confiscation of property, the promises of Utopia to be realized thru endless bloodshed—all these, and many more, phases of the French terror, have appeared again on the Soviet scene.

The reign of terror in France reached its final climax in the execution, one by one, of the arch-terrorists themselves. The revolutionist leaders found their own heads placed on the guillotine block which they had built for the murdering of other men.

The mob—fickle as always—howled for the blood of its own inflamers. Danton and Robespierre, among others, became the victims of the mob violence they had instigated against their enemies.

The Russian reign of terror is now approaching the last stages of self-destruction. Last year, Kamenev and Zinoviev, leaders with Lenin and Trotsky of the Bolshevik Revolution, were executed, after being charged with plotting the overthrow of the Stalinist regime.

Now, two more of the "founding fathers" of Sovietism are about to face a firing squad. They are Belabodoff, former president of the Orenburg Soviet, who participated in the slaughter of the Czar and his family in 1917 and Karl Radek, former editor of Izvestia, the official organ of the Soviet government.

These two men are also charged with "plotting with Trotsky" the overthrow of the Soviet Union. Trotsky has become, for Stalin, a convenient scapegoat. Whenever the Red dictator wishes to get rid of some of his "comrades", he charges them with conspiring with Trotsky.

The Russian mob has been taught that Stalin is determined that "Trotsky must die." Continually, they chant the slogan. But the fact is that Trotsky's death is the last thing Stalin wishes. He must keep the old man alive, if he is to continue having a ready means of eliminating unwanted "comrades." Sooner or later, some ambitious rival will probably charge Stalin with "Trotskyism", and the great terrorist will go the way of Robespierre.

Trotsky is now living in Mexico. Stalin constantly makes mock charges that his exiled comrade is continuing his plotting. But it is an open secret that Trotsky's plotting is for "world revolution", as envisioned by Stalin, and not against it. With North and South American countries known to be marked by the Soviets for early revolution, Mexico is a convenient place to have Trotsky at this time. Despite personal jealousy, Stalin knows that Trotsky is the ablest conspirator at his command today.

Most South American Countries, as well as the United States, have recognized the Soviet government only on condition that it does not permit its agitators to operate within their borders. Since Trotsky has been officially repudiated by Stalin, exiled from the Soviet Union, and branded as an enemy, the Bolshevik government cannot be blamed for his revolutionary activities in other countries.

Hence, at home and abroad, Trotsky fits most conveniently into the Stalinist scheme.

THE LUTH. HOUR

NO SCIENTIFIC PROOF TO CHALLENGE RESURRECTION, Dr. Maier Asserts.

"Without the Easter hope of the resurrection, our generation is doomed to pagan despair," Dr. Walter Maier declared Sunday in his coast-to-coast Lutheran Hour broadcast. "Destroy the message of the open grave and you have destroyed the hope and blessing of all immortality, with the great incentive that the resurrection confidence sustains."

"In a notable trend of our time, American colleges with foundations for the discussion of immortality and the soul hereafter have for the most part featured lecturers who either deny or question the resurrection."

"While the scientific revolt now in progress tends to remove skepticism in regard to life beyond the grave, we still have a coterie of men in the scientific world who ridicule the Easter message and its implications. But these contradictions in the name of science need not disturb us for they are simply the continuation of scientific errors of the past."

Lavoisier, one of the greatest figures in the history of chemistry, stubbornly taught that heat was a substance. Plato believed the stomach shared mental activity with the brain. Nineteenth century scientists claimed tooth decay came from worms. For a long time psychiatrists declared "that most criminals were feeble-minded"; ancient phrenologists taught that insanity was produced by too much heat or cold in the brain and their more modern associates hold that each cranial bump indicated a particular characteristic.

All this, together with hundreds of other scientific theories have been disproved and those mistakes entitle us to ask if the scientific world can not solve questions pertaining to the teeth, stomach, brain, skull and the forces of nature that surround us, why should atheists and infidel scientists dare to deny the immortality of the soul?

The Lutheran Hour will be broadcast again next Sunday April fourth, the final broadcast of the current series. The program will be resumed on a coast-to-coast network early next fall.

EPICURES ENJOY ROAST LAMB AND MINT ICE

ROAST lamb and mint ice! That is the modern version of an American culinary combination that has made Easter Day dinners memorable for many a year! Tender lamb and mint ice to accompany it, however, would bring an epicure from afar, so don't limit it to Easter dinners. Here's our favorite recipe for a smooth Mint Ice. Dissolve ½ cup of sugar in 1½ cups of boiling water. Then beat one 8-oz. glass of mint jelly with fork and add to the water and sugar mixture. Stir until dissolved; then add ¼ cup lemon juice and 1¼ cups orange juice. Cool. Fold in 2 beaten egg whites. Pour mixture into freezing container of modern ice cream freezer. Assemble and cover. Then pack mixture of crushed ice and rock salt (use 3 parts ice to one part salt by volume) around the freezing container. (With plenty of ice on hand in your streamlined modern air-conditioned ice refrigerator, you can always prepare and serve delicious homemade ice creams and ices at almost a moment's notice.) Turn crank slowly but steadily for about 5 minutes. When mixture becomes difficult to turn, remove cover carefully, take out dasher, and pack down evenly with a spoon. Cover mint ice with wax paper and replace cover. Draw off water and replenish ice and salt mixture. Cover and allow to harden at least one hour before serving.

Will Rogers' Humorous Story

By WILL ROGERS

THERE'S a regular fad now for digging up the dirt on all the famous people of history. I hear talk going around about how Franklin used to kid the ladies along in Paris and Washington, used to swear a lick or two when his false teeth wouldn't jibe, and the other day I was told that the professors that teach history in the colleges are partly to blame. They like to keep their classes interested, of course, and so they have to hand 'em a little scandal now and then on the old fellows of history. A professor at Harvard, I heard, was telling his class about Cleopatra, and he intimated as broadly as he could that maybe she was, not exactly in favor of closing up the night clubs or chasing all the slot machines out of town. And one of the young men in his class (from Boston, I believe) said: "Well, professor, did you mean to intimate that Cleopatra, the great queen was not above suspicion?"

The prof was a bit puzzled. He was afraid to say too much for fear the trustees might not like it, and he was afraid to say too little for fear his other students would go to sleep. So he says:

"Well, I wouldn't say there was any suspicion in the case at all. But, on the other hand, there's no record in history that Cleopatra swam home from any barge rides, and she went on one or two sail with this Mark Anthony chap."

An audit taken after he had confessed taking $300 in a loan company holdup resulted in a $5,000 accounting suit being filed in Kankakee against Delvin Lines, thirty-two years old. The suit alleged he was short in his accounts as the Momence school treasurer. Lines confessed that he held up the loan company and fired a shot at William Becker, president.

There is a shortage of skilled labor in Illinois, Dr. A. H. R. Atwood, director of the Illinois state employment service, announced. Top Hats Go With Rifles Among the Eton Boys

Bedtime Story for Children

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

WHERE MRS. GROUSE WAS

SAMMY Jay had spread a false report all through the snow-covered Green Forest and over the glistening Green Meadows. He had told every one he met that Farmer Brown's boy had killed poor Mrs. Grouse and taken her home for his dinner. Now, it was true that he had taken her home, but it wasn't true that he had killed her. You see, he had found her very weak and helpless under the hard, icy crust that Jack Frost had made while she was asleep down under the snow, and which she couldn't break. Sammy Jay and Peter Rabbit had both seen her carried away and both knew that she hadn't been killed. But it made a bigger story, a more dreadful story, to say that she had been killed, and Sammy Jay dearly loves to tell bad news. Besides, he is always ready to think evil of others.

Some of Them Peter Rabbit Saw, and He Told Them Sammy Jay's Story Was Not True.

"If he didn't kill her, then he will kill her when he gets her home," said Sammy to himself, "and so it's all right to say that he has killed her." So he flew about spreading that dreadful false story and actually enjoyed telling the dreadful news.

Of course, all of the friends of Mrs. Grouse felt terrible. Some of them Peter Rabbit saw and he told them Sammy Jay's story was not true—that Mrs. Grouse had not been killed. But he had to admit that she had been carried away by Farmer Brown's boy, and to her friends this seemed almost as bad, for most of them were very much afraid of Farmer Brown's boy and quite willing to believe the very worst of him. So they all mourned for poor Mrs. Grouse and said how dreadful and how sad it was and how they hoped something dreadful would happen to Farmer Brown's boy.

But Mrs. Grouse didn't know anything about this. At first she had been terribly frightened when she had been picked up and knew that Farmer Brown's boy held her a prisoner. But after a while his hands felt very warm, for she was shivering with cold, and they seemed very gentle. And then, she didn't know why, she wasn't afraid any more. She just cuddled right down and felt sure that nothing dreadful was going to happen.

And nothing dreadful did happen. Oh, my, no! She was taken up to Farmer Brown's house and right inside, where it was as warm as in summer and where Farmer Brown's boy's mother stroked her with such gentle hands and said, "You poor, poor little bird." And then when she was warm she was taken out to the henhouse and put in a box with plenty of nice warm hay and there she was left with all the corn and oats and barley that she could eat. This was what she needed most, for you know it was because she had had nothing to eat for so long, while she was a prisoner under that dreadful icy crust, that she was too weak to fly when the crust was broken.

So she ate and ate until she could eat no more and then nestled down in the soft, warm hay to sleep, for she was tired, so very, very tired. And as she closed her eyes it seemed to her that she couldn't remember when she had been so comfortable—Certainly not for days and days. And she could sleep without fear of Reddy Fox or Hooty the Owl or any other danger. To be sure, she was a prisoner, but somehow she didn't mind. Not then, anyway. And — and — well, Farmer Brown's boy wasn't dreadful at all; he was rather nice.

FIRST-AID TO AILING HOUSE

By ROGER B. WHITMAN

LOOK BEFORE YOU BUY

TWO years ago a friend of mine bought a suburban house. The design of the house suited him and he was greatly pleased with the location of the property, which was at the foot of a gradual slope heavily covered with trees. As soon as he was installed he laid out a garden behind the house, and looked forward to the pleasure that he would have with it. Three months later a heavy storm blew up one night. The next morning, to his dismay, he found that a rush of water down the hillside had washed away part of his garden and cut gashes and furrows in the rest. On talking it over, he realized that his many visits to the house before buying were all made on pleasant days; that it had not occurred to him to find out what the place would be like in bad weather.

I have known of many similar instances; the development of unpleasant qualities that could have been foreseen if the buyer had looked the place over under all conditions. My advice to a prospective buyer is to visit the property in bad weather as well as in clear; late at night as well as in the daytime; on Sundays and holidays as well as in the middle of a week. Here are some examples of failures to do this:

One district that I know is charming in dry weather, but as the sewers are too small to take care of a heavy rainfall, the street may be flooded for hours at a time.

A street that I know connects with an avenue leading to a public beach and amusement park some miles distant. On summer weekdays it carries but little traffic, but on weekends and holidays it is jammed with cars; traffic is heavy and noisy until late at night.

A family bought a country property that answered all of their desires in house and garden. The section was isolated, the only near neighbor being a similar house a few hundred feet away. On their first night a dance band started up in the neighboring house, and many cars collected there. The family then realized that the house, quiet in the daytime, was actually a roadhouse and responsible for music, shouting and whoopee that lasted into early morning.

No buyer can know what he is buying and the conditions surrounding a property until he has visited it under all conditions of weather and time.

WHY DO THE SELF-MADE OFF-EN SNEER AT COLLEGE EDUCATION?

WHEN any one ridicules something which has been denied him, it usually means that this person is putting up a "defense mechanism"—that is, he is trying to raise himself by lowering the thing which makes him seem small. Most people who have not been to college greatly overestimate the value and importance of college training and imagine that they lack some-

The Things
Delayed

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

ONLY a little month ago We faced the Allegheny snow And thought the spring would never come; But spring, at worst, is only snow. And winter only wearisome.

Some joys are oftentimes delayed, And hearts grow oftentimes afraid Some joy desired will never be; And yet the snowy blanket made But greener grass and fairer tree.

The things delayed will yet appear; We need not worry, need not fear, Need only pray, and wait, and pray.

There is a springtime every year, Though mountains have their snow in May.

Far better have the flow'rs of June To come too late than come too soon While yet the winter lingers nigh. So I'll await tomorrow's noon If clouds today obscure the sky.

IT IS surprising how clearly well-balanced initiative or the lack of it shows in the conformation and placing of the forefinger.

Other compensating influences within the hand may, of course, offset many an adverse indication in this element which so unerringly tells the trained analyst of the individual's trends in power and purpose. The importance of careful study of the forefinger as an aid to complete and correct interpretation of the inner self cannot be too strongly emphasized.

The Executive Finger of Jupiter.

A small amount of comparative study will enable you to recognize the efficient conformation of this finger immediately. This type is marked by definite characteristics. These are (1) Unusual straightness from root to tip; (2) full yet smoothly modeled joints; (3) pronounced width of space between the forefinger and the adjoining second finger.

The nail tip of this type of forefinger usually tapers slightly, but the end is nearly always definitely squared, with square though slightly elongated nail symmetrically set.

With the hand extended wide, one gets a very positive impression that the finger is pointing directly at some unseen but clearly understood objective.

Forefingers of this type are found on the hands of men and women who are real "go-getters," who know what they are about, form their ambitions concretely, and employ efficient means in reaching their objectives.

thing very essential. This sometimes drives them to ridicule the education they do not have and which they envy in others. There are some self-made men who realize that they missed something in the line of education and try to compensate for it by reading and becoming well informed. This is much better than ridiculing education and is a mark of superior intelligence.

DIANE could never remember a time when she had felt quite so excited, so thrilled with anticipation. She dabbed finishing touches of powder on her cheeks and turned to glance at the clock on her dressing table. Three-fifteen.

In another quarter hour Paul would be home!

The thought sent little tremors of delight running through her body. Paul! Her childhood sweetheart.

It was ten, no eleven years ago that he had gone to England to finish his education.

The parting had been heartbreaking. Both had cried a little, and both had pledged their undying love and fidelity.

Eleven years! That was a long, long time.

Paul must have changed a lot, grown from a mere stripling into a full sized man.

It was easy to picture him tall and dark and handsome.

Oh, it would be grand having him back!

There would be a respectable period of waiting, and then the wedding.

Mrs. Veery, Paul's mother, had it all arranged. Mrs. Veery! How kind and thoughtful and understanding she was.

Thinking of Mrs. Veery, Diane's thoughts hesitated in their excited racing and dwelt for a moment on Larry.

Larry was Paul's brother, the boy who stayed at home to keep his mother company.

He had loved Diane all his life.

He had hoped, that when Paul went away, she would find time for him, discover in him qualities that would excite her natural instincts for a mate.

Diane sighed. Poor Larry.

He was so lacking in imagination and glamour, so unable to understand that her love for Paul was too deep-rooted and real to be thus thrust aside. You couldn't help liking Larry; he was so kind and dependable, had acted so much the good sport when Diane had given him her final answer. Vaguely she knew that the mere fact he had accepted her decision as final without doing anything about it was one of the chief reasons why she could never love him.

The raucous note of an automobile horn brought Diane out of her reverie.

She rushed to the window, and her heart for a moment seemed to stand still.

Outside was Larry, and sitting beside him in the roadster was Paul! She realized with a little thrill that he must have insisted on coming over directly.

Why, he'd scarcely had time to greet his own mother!

The two young men were at the door by the time Diane reached it. "Well, here he is!" Larry was grinning.

"Fresh from England, cockney accent and all."

But Diane scarcely heard him. She was looking at Paul.

He had changed, was actually better looking, not quite so glamorous as she had hoped, but still Paul. He was regarding her smilingly.

"Ello, old thing," he said extending his hand. "And 'ows it go?"

For just a second Diane was taken back.

She had half expected he would sweep her into his arms, hold her tight for long minutes when words of greeting would be out of place, not needed.

Silly of her.

She held out her hand. "Hello, Paul. It's nice to have you back."

"Rawther!"

Paul stepped inside the house and looked around with a patronizing expression.

"Jolly place you have 'ere. Yaws. Fixed the old dump up a bit, haven't you?"

"Why, yes. That is, mother had it redecorated."

Diane sat down watching him. All the hundreds of exciting things she wanted to talk with him about seemed suddenly ridiculous and remote.

"Like it?"

"Why, yaws. I fancy I do. That is, sort of, you know."

Diane didn't know what answer to make to that statement, and she was grateful when Larry interrupted with his familiar, pleasing tones.

"Mother wasn't at home, so we thought we'd run over here. Paul wanted to see you, he said, before anyone else."

Diane's heart leaped.

She looked at Paul, but Paul had produced a monologue and was peering at a water color above the mantel.

Diane had a horrible feeling that Larry might have made up that story. Dear Larry. He didn't want her to be disappointed.

"A copy," said Paul, turning away from the water color and restoring his monologue.

"Dear, dear, why will people buy copies?"

Diane gathered that he was referring to the water color, and a flash of anger surged through her. She might have said something, but at that moment her mother appeared. "Why, Paul!" Mrs. Shore stopped in the conservatory doorway and stared in pleased surprise.

"Paul, darling, you're back. How delightful! How simply divine!" The old lady came forward with her hand outstretched.

"Aw, nuts!" said Paul. "Haw!" Mrs. Shore stopped as if struck. "I beg your pardon?" she said. "One of your American expressions," Paul explained.

"Nuts! Odd thing to say, isn't it? Haw!"

A week later Larry strolled up the front walk of the Shore home-stead and found Diane sitting alone on the veranda.

"Paul," he said, "is returning to England tomorrow. He doesn't like it here. Everything seems to bore him. He can't get along with the people he meets."

"I can readily understand that," Diane said coldly.

"I should think the people he meets would get so everlasting-ly tired and fed up—"

She broke off, biting her lip.

"I understand," Larry smiled.

"You can say what you want and I'll agree. Simply because I'm his brother doesn't change my opinion."

Diane was suddenly on the verge of tears.

"Oh, Larry, he's—he's impossible!" She laid her head on his shoulder and began to cry softly.

"And—and Larry you are so—so—oh, I was a fool to have thought you weren't the—the"

Larry's grin broadened.

He patted her shoulder.

"Listen, honey," he said seriously. "How would you like to elope with me—tonight?"

Diane sat bolt upright and stared.

"Larry! Elope! With you! Tonight! Oh! Larry, darling, would you! I mean, that is, after the way I acted! Oh, Larry!"

Larry went home and began packing a bag.

After a moment his brother, Paul, came in and regarded him questioningly.

"Did you see Diane?"

Larry grinned joyously.

"Well, you just bet I saw her!"

"And she—you're going to elope?"

"Tonight."

Paul expelled a great breath of air.

"Splendid! That will give me an opportunity to go over and apologize to Mrs. Shore for the way I acted, before sailing."

For a moment a rueful expression crossed his face.

"Larry, you're sure you can fix it with everyone? I mean, explain that I'm not really such a—sap?"

"Positive. Forget it. Don't let it worry you."

Larry came across the room and extended his hand.

"And, Paul, old man, thanks. When you get back to that girl in London, marry her at once. Then come home again, and prove it yourself."

Paul grinned and shook his brother's hand.

"Larry, that was a great idea of yours. I worried during the entire trip about Diane. You see, she had that childish love about us. I knew she didn't love me or that I could make her happy, and there I was engaged and madly in love with Jean, and, well, you suggested that I play the part of an American's conception of what Englishmen are like—"

He grinned. "It worked out fine, didn't it?"

"Fine," said Larry, "is only a mild way of expressing it."

Oldest Musical Instrument

Is Dug Up at Tepe Gawra

A double pipe made of bone recently discovered at Tepe Gawra in Mesopotamia is believed to be the oldest music instrument known to man, according to a statement issued by Prof. Millar Burrows, of the Yale Divinity School, president of the American Schools of Oriental Research, writes a New Haven, Conn., correspondent in the New York Herald-Tribune. The instrument dates from the Chalcolithic age, the period which preceded the Bronze age. Tepe Gawra, an important prehistoric site in northern Mesopotamia, is being excavated by a joint expedition of the University of Pennsylvania Museum and the American Schools of Oriental Research, under the direction of Prof. E. A. Speiser of the University of Pennsylvania, director of the American School of Oriental Research at Baghdad.

Another object which has been uncovered, also dating from the Chalcolithic age, and said to be of great importance in the history of art, is a large bowl decorated with red paint. Panels on the bowl show sections of landscape, including mountains, rivers, animals and even a hunting scene. At a higher level of the mound, dated about 3000 B. C., was found a carnelian bead of a kind characteristic of the ancient Indus valley culture, one of the many illustrations of the commercial contacts between India and Mesopotamia in the early dynastic period.

In order to determine the date of a remarkable round house discovered toward the end of the last season the expedition has extended the area which is being dug and is carrying the whole excavation down to the level previously reached in a small segment of the mound. When this has been done the lower levels will be investigated in order to establish the stratification and the sequences of prehistoric painted pottery.

Washington.—Immediately after the armistice in 1918, the country was suddenly awakened to the fact that living costs were extraordinarily high. It was a condition that struck close home to everyone. It was a condition that developed an unusual emotion. There followed, naturally, a wave that engulfed hundreds of thousands of people who felt that they were being subjected to high prices that were unjustified.

Living Costs

Most people will remember how "H. C. L." became an expression as common and one that figured in as many puns and jokes and wise cracks as the alphabetical agencies common now to the New Deal. It was a type of propaganda that came along spontaneously because the condition affected so many people.

The reason I have recalled that circumstance is because we are again headed straight into another era of "H. C. L." We have not reached the top of living costs by any means. It takes more than a fortune teller or crystal gazer to predict what is going to happen in the way of increased commodity prices. Suffice it to say, however, that a "vicious cycle" has started whirling and in the midst of the situation stands a very confused consumer, representative of all of the people in the United States.

There undoubtedly will be an increase in the propaganda concerning living costs again. Indeed, there already is a rather far-flung propaganda which results from the increased cost of living but it is directed rather on a slant and not pointed accurately into the heart of the condition now confronting us.

Undoubtedly a great many people have not thought of the frequent and recurring attacks on business and business practices as having anything to do with the increased living costs. But the truth is that this type of propaganda springs directly from the sporadic cries that are coming from many localities about the higher prices—complaints that the dollar does not go very far in buying food across the grocery counter.

It seems to me that it is time for some calm thinking about this situation. It seems to me further that public officials everywhere ought to be honest enough to analyze the situation and tell the public what the real causes are. If this is not done, there again will be undoubtedly a perfect deluge of propaganda in protest against high living costs and the bulk of the people who suffer from these increased costs will not know the reason any more than they understood the reasons that brought about a counterpart of the present outlook back in 1918 and 1919.

In any examination of an economic condition, one must dig considerably below the surface to find the factors that have operated to bring about the results visible to the eye. Such is certainly the case in the present situation. One can not fairly say that the present booming prices in food have just happened; they are brought about. They have been brought about in the present circumstance by factors that date back to 1933 and include numerous governmental policies that have been initiated since that time.

The trained economist will describe present conditions as due to inflation—which indeed they are. But inflation is such an all-inclusive term that the real story lies hidden.

Seeking the Cause

In an effort to spur and encourage production and aid recovery, President Roosevelt devalued the dollar. He reduced its gold value. During 1933 and 1934 there came numerous pieces of legislation including the NRA and the AAA, each designed to foster increased prices and to build up the level of wages for industrial workers.

Subsequently, President Roosevelt sponsored legislation which had as its end and aim federal control of wages for workers. This legislation sought to give the federal government power to force business interests to recognize labor unions and to accept labor union scales of pay—all to the end that labor should be paid a greater percentage of the returns received by business.

There came also legislation designed to increase the price of silver and the United States Treasury was directed by this law to buy millions of ounces of silver and to use that silver in our currency. In the meantime and recurring almost constantly the New Deal administration, from President Roosevelt on down, maintained a barrage of attacks on business interests seeking wider employment of labor at increased wages. Coupled with these attacks was violent criticism of banks and bankers. They were charged with being an obstacle to recovery because they were not lending money. It did not matter to the critics that no one wanted to borrow money; the criticisms were continued because loans simply were not being made and no examination of the reason why loans were not being made ever was undertaken.

Next in the chain of events and still continuing came labor troubles. The New Deal avowedly was on the side of labor and against employers. Strikes followed in increasing numbers. The results of this combination of factors and circumstances now are showing. Considered from any angle, one can not fail to see why they constitute a cycle of events that lead to higher prices.

When the dollar was cheaper by devaluation, more dollars were required to feed a family than had been required before. Workers felt this sting. They demanded more dollars in pay for their work. Pressure from the New Deal administration together with labor's use of the strike weapon forced business to pay higher wages.

But, business must live. It can not live unless it gets back its costs of production. Agriculture can not subsist unless it receives a reasonable price for its production. Neither agriculture nor industry will go ahead unless there is a reward in the shape of a profit. Consequently, neither agriculture nor industry is going to absorb these increased costs alone. The natural and the only way it has to get back those expenditures is by charging higher prices to the buyers of those products. Thus, we have the complete cycle—and the consumer, as usual, is the goat. The consumer pays and if that consumer be not in a position to enforce a higher return for the services he renders, he is caught between the upper and nether millstones. It appears that the consumer is fast getting himself into the grip of that vise.

In connection with this increasing price level, and the dangers inherent in the general situation, I think credit ought to be given to President Eccles, of the Federal Reserve board of governors, for the bold statement he made a few days ago. Mr. Eccles warned the country very frankly what the dangers are in a situation where labor continues to clamor for a greater share of the profits of commerce and industry and where labor's leadership seeks to take advantage of the inability of employers to protect themselves.

The Eccles statement took occasion to link labor's position with the general money market and the effect labor's position is having on the country as a whole. He referred to the demands of some labor leaders for a working week of 30 hours and while not completely discarding that theory, he gave the very definite impression that shorter hours do not constitute a solution for our present problem.

"Increased wages and shorter hours," said Mr. Eccles, "when they limit or actually reduce production are not at this time in the interest of the public in general or in the real interest of the workers themselves. When wage increases are passed along to the public, and particularly when industries take advantage of any existing situation to increase prices far beyond increased labor costs, such action is shortsighted and an indefensible policy from every standpoint."

"Wage increases and shorter hours are justified and wholly desirable when they result from increasing production per capita and represent a better distribution of the profits of industry. When they retard and restrict production and cause price inflation, they result in throwing the buying power of the various groups in the entire economy out of balance, working a particular hardship upon agriculture, the unorganized workers, the recipients of fixed incomes and all consumers."

"The upward spiral of wages and prices into inflationary price levels can be as disastrous as the downward spiral of deflation. If such conditions develop, the government should intervene in the public interest by taking such action as is necessary to correct the abuses."

"The remedy for a price inflation when the country has unused man power, natural resources and capital, is through more, not less production, through an orderly, balanced use of these three fundamental factors and not by creating a needless, artificial shortage of any one of them."

Thus we have brought into bold relief a criticism of the final factor entering into the present increasing price level. I refer to the artificial shortage in food products that resulted from the ridiculous crop control program that was accomplished through AAA. We are now paying the price for the destruction of 6,000,000 little pigs.

I said at the beginning of this discussion that a calm examination of the factors involved was necessary now if it ever were necessary in history.

Harmonizing With Spring

THIS week's crop of fashions seem fully as sweet and gay and long-awaited as lovely Spring—with which they're meant to harmonize. Mary, Sue and Emily, three charming standees, know how to have day in day out chic without forfeiting that pretty silver lining in their new Spring purses.

Hints From Mary's Boudoir.

"I'm especially fussy about the slip I wear, perhaps that's why I always sew-my-own! I never miss the few hours it takes, and I can spend the difference for a finer, better-wearing fabric. A slip that's well-behaved is a joy to yourself—others as well—and just as easy to have. So take a tip from one who knows: choose this model and a good fabric and you'll have no further slip troubles."

A Lift for M'Lady.

"A new frock means more to me than a new fabric and a change of color—it means a lift, a new lease on life!" So says Miss Sue, a snappy sophomore who sews. "I decided 1252 had the kind of newness I want: the clever cut of the waistcoat bodice first caught my fancy, and the saucy swing skirt made me sign on the dotted line. I go for simple necklines, and I like lots of buttons too. You should see my version in royal blue silk crepe—really, it's something to be proud of."

Designers Win Praise.

"Smart Matron your granny," retorts Emily to an intended bit of flattery regarding her new welcome to spring frock. "If I look as young as I feel I'll be mistaken for a Laf-a-Lo! But honestly, this new dress gives me a more dressed-up feeling than any I can remember in Springs gone by. I think Sew-Your-Own designers are smart to give us '40's some of that swing the youngsters rave about. Do you suppose they sympathize with the poor young men who are urged nowadays to 'Swing, Swing, dear Mother-in-law'?"

MANY LETTERS

Addressed to You Personally

THINK of the advertisements in this paper as so many letters addressed to you personally. That's what they're intended to be, and, actually, that's what they are. This newspaper is, in effect, a mail-bag which brings you news of events and news of the best merchandise at the fairest prices.

You don't throw away letters unread. You don't read three or four letters carefully and skim through the rest. Treat the "merchandise letters" in this newspaper the same way. Read them all. Read them carefully. One single item will often repay you for the time it has taken to read them all.

Many good housekeepers have formed the habit of reading their newspaper with a pencil and paper, ready to jot down the articles they wish to look at when they start out on their shopping tour. Try this method. It saves time, and saves money, and provides you with the pick of the day's merchandise.
